We will leave it at $190 million. I will write a short note to Adam/Kim pointing out the larger amount and see whether they want to change it or await verification.

I suppose that's a question for us. Either we leave it as is and wait for the 'official' confirmation through the tracker, or we update it now.

Campbelltown's additional funding was in a media release. It states: The billabong parklands is funded by Council and the NSW State Government and Federal Government through the Western Sydney City Deal Liveability Fund, now to a total value of $31 million. Previously, the project was $18.75 million (AG: $7.5m, NSW:$7.5m, Campbelltown: $3.75m), so it's an additional $12.25 million.

Hi [redacted]

I have confirmed with s [redacted] and s [redacted]. We will get an updated Liveability Tracker on 1 February 2021 that will show that, at January 2021, the total amount of funding committed by the three levels of government to the Western Parkland City Liveability Program is $205 million. The increase in the size of the Program is due additional funding provided by councils due to the projects growing in scope (not because of cost blowouts). The Australian Government and NSW Government contribution of $120 million ($60 million each) has not changed.

Hi [redacted]

s [redacted] informed me that due to councils funding higher amounts for their liveability projects, the funding number for the liveability program will be adjusted to something higher than $190 million.

She noted that you were going to discuss with s [redacted] about this. Would you please let us know the outcome of this decision (if to keep it at 190 or adjust it) s 22 [redacted]

Thank you,

MEDIA RELEASE

December 2020

Additional investment for Campbelltown Billabong Parklands

Plans to phase the development of the Campbelltown Billabong Parklands have been adjusted to deliver the complete vision of the iconic water play space and parkland area when it is complete in June 2022.

At last night's meeting, Council resolved to invest an additional $12.25 million to include state-of-the-art pool operating systems as well as bring forward landscaping and cultural elements that will increase the appeal and functionality of the unique regional parkland.

The funding has been made available from Council's unrestricted reserves and will be repaid over a six year period.

"There has been a palpable sense of excitement in our community for this public facility that will be integral in the transformation of our city centre and toward realising our Reimagining Campbelltown City Centre Master Plan," Mayor George Brticevic said.

"Throughout the community consultation and concept design process we've heard our residents' expectations and this additional funding will ensure those are realised from the day the parklands open and will future-proof the site so that the facility is a real success," he said.

"By doing this work now, we are able to save money in the long-term and minimise future disruptions so that people are able to enjoy the space to its full potential from the day it opens and well into the future."

Features of the Billabong Parklands include a 2.0m deep lagoon, a children's pool, and a zero-depth water play area with a range of interactive water elements, open spaces and native tree plantings.

The enhancements include improved and more efficient filtration and pump systems to each section of the pools, extensive integrated art that represents the Campbelltown community and Aboriginal culture, enhanced landscape features and services ready for the provision of any commercial opportunities in the future.

The billabong parklands is funded by Council and the NSW State Government and Federal Government through the Western Sydney City Deal Liveability Fund, now to a total value of $31 million.

Construction on the project began in June and is expected to be complete by June 2022.
