

Sir;

In general, it is hardly possible to build a long term prosperity, not to mention sovereignty, without projecting even a longer term vision of the future.

This initiative is about sharing an educated guess picture of Australia by the end and beyond of this century aimed at stimulating projections of similar long term visions while taking the fullest possible account of the vast and qualitatively changing future demographics Down Under.

Those particular pictures have been projected under the unique research into the future from the most critical perspective, hopefully, to help us building the legacy of an inclusive, happy and prosperous country for many future generations to enjoy.

🌀 In fact, it is about a pretty detailed vision of the roadmap ahead for carving out our own place under the new Sun in the Next New World — building the national sovereignty in a qualitatively new epoch of Digitisation.

🕒 Conceptually, since we are and for a good while will remain a migrant built&managed country, it is about creating the appealing vision of Australian DREAM for attracting Down Under the best possible people.

→ The Dream of social justice and human dignity living underwritten by the massive, controllably expandable market for the local real economy driving industries in a modular urbanisation future.

Namely, the machine-building, transport&infrastructure equipment production, raw materials-to-product manufacturing, sustainable nutritious agriculture with clean energy and water security in the bushfire proof environment under the possibly most effective nuclear military deterrent guarding the future complex sovereignty. A true future made in Australia.

The coherent nature of this disruptive proposition, while perfect for identifying and taking advantage of future challenges&opportunities, is focused on liberating the national mindset from the paralysing 'business-as-usual' and 'we can buy it' habits with the appealing alternative the community would happily take the ownership of.

Its major dimensions to be:

→ Foremost, by coming up with the appealing Homo Australis ideology for the E Pluribus Unum future, perhaps by taking a good leaf of the Soviet Union's (still working well) multiethnic, multi-faith social experience.

→ Building a strictly secular nation, including cutting off any public support for faith-based groups here and consequently, requiring the prospective migrants leaving their religious flags (and parents) behind.

→ Alleviating any public fear, often skillfully stirred up by the groups of not-national-longterm interests, about new migrants taking our jobs, clogging our hospitals and renting&buying out our houses.

→ Producing and publicising worldwide a new national long term migration program outlining to prospective migrants the future challenges in opening up new regions, thus giving everyone an equal chance of equipping themselves with the required skills and, critically important, right aptitudes demanded by that kind of opportunities as for seamlessly fitting into a new reality.

→ Including, running the English language classes in overseas migrant camps for prospective occupations.

→ Practically guiding global investors, inventors and entrepreneurial minds in positioning for the future mega-opportunities of our own creation.

→ Since (the concept of) money builds nothing, but workers do – restructuring our vocational&professional institutions for producing the required workforce. (unless we address this, in a long run we will always be beaten by Chinese, wherever we chose/are forced to compete)

For as long as 'informed is armed', hopefully, the long term vision of sustainable and inclusive Australia would provide the best ever instrument for ourselves in managing risks of realising our chances.

Should more pointers on building the new epoch fitting national Dream be sought, it could be provided on request.

○ While we should be weary, that upon entering the new epoch with the perfect memory and where the smallest straw in the pile of hay could be found instantaneously, given that every decision we take has its first&second names and the DOB, there is no more safe anonymity and the future generations of those volunteering to take responsibility today will shine in the full glory or bear the burden of decisions we take today.

Recognising that our today was created by someone else legacy in the past, as much as we now create the future for someone else —

Please, consider.

Wishing us getting our chances right -

Respectfully,

Vis Koffsovitz (Mr)
